ASPA Spring Conference

Redefining and Enhancing the Footprint of Accreditation

The accrediting community has been, and will continue to be, impacted by advances in technology and the ever changing landscape of society. This program will explore how ASPA member accreditors have utilized technology and new concepts in higher education to: transform processes and operations, increase public awareness about the value and importance of accreditation, and reduce risk to ensure confidentiality and credibility in the accreditation process.

Attendees will have the opportunity to gain a deeper understanding of the various perspectives on these issues and to take away ideas to enhance the effectiveness of their accreditation operations.

Monday, March 30, 2015 (all sessions in Crystal Ballroom)

1:00 pm  Introductions and Welcome

Leslie Higham, Accreditation Program Specialist, Global Accreditation Center for Project Management Education Programs (GAC), Project Management Institute

1:15 pm  Accreditation and a Changing Landscape: Is Technology a Good Fit?

• Explore: What are value-added constructs in accreditation leading to best practices?
• Discuss: Are accreditation and innovation paradoxical?
• Possibilities: How can the use of technologies advance accreditation structures, processes and outcomes?

ASPA Spring Conference
Redefining and Enhancing the Footprint of Accreditation

4:15 pm  Oxford Debate
Teams of accreditors will debate the overarching question: is embracing technology nothing more than accreditors adapting their practices to consumer expectations of services in the Internet Age to keep up with the millennial? Or is technology a vehicle for enhancing relationships between agencies and accredited programs?

Resolved: that expanding the virtual footprint of accreditation through the use of technology will enhance the quality assurance process for accrediting agencies and related publics.
